This State of the Art report is part of the comparative research project QUING that is financed by the European Commission. QUING will answer two important questions: What are actually gender equality policies in the practice of national and European policy making? And also: What is the quality of these current policies, especially in terms of their transformative potential, their attention for other inequalities and their openness for voices of the movements that lay at its origin? QUING studies all 27 EU-countries plus Croatia and Turkey. QUING will present results from January 2009 on, and will be finished in 2011.

For its analysis, QUING has chosen three gender equality relevant issues: non-employment, intimate citizenship and gender based violence. The comparative study will enable a better understanding of differences and similarities, and of the quality of gender equality policies. This comparative analysis is the heart of QUING that will generate new theory, that will be relevant to the whole of Europe. These parts of QUING are named LARG and WHY. In a related part, named STRIQ, the project will further develop theories on intersectionality, on the relationship between gender inequalities and inequalities originating in ethnicity, class, religion or sexuality, and describe and analyze to what extent and how intersectionality is incorporated in gender equality policies with across Europe. Additionally, QUING will also be preparing the ground for comparative research on the history of feminist ideas in Europe. In this part, named FRAGEN, QUING will start with the construction of a database that will ‘open’ selected core feminist texts to researchers by storing original second wave feminist texts in the database together with an analytic description of these texts in English. QUING will open this database to the research community in its last year. In its last two years, QUING will also be very active with its fifth part, named OPERA, actively translating its knowledge in gender training for all actors in policy making, and it will develop high quality standards for such training, that will be tested in practice. For a more extensive presentation of the QUING project please consult the website at www.quing.eu.

This State of the Art report has the goal of assuring that the QUING researchers start their research using the knowledge that is already available on gender equality policies in a country. In this sense, the State of the Art is a classic literature review, relevant to the different parts of the QUING project (LARG, WHY and STRIQ). Added to this, some information is asked for that facilitates the preparation of the activities in FRAGEN.

This report is structured as follows. In the first part a short assessment is made of the annotated bibliography that can be found in the second part of this report. In the second part of the report one will find the actual annotated bibliography. This part maps the most important relevant academic studies and other policy related literature (reports by IO, INGOs, experts etc.) about each country. The annotated bibliography has been divided into four separate sections. One section covers studies relating to gender equality policies, the following one is on non-employment related articles, the next one is on intimate citizenship related articles and the final one is on gendered violence related articles. In all sections, the accent is on studies that focus on the gender equality aspects of policies relating to these issues. The four sections itself have been divided into country language studies and English language studies. Comparative studies can be found under a separate heading within these language groups. Next to the bibliography, this part also contains a section relating to the OPERA part of the QUING project in which the most relevant gender training literature that has been produced in the country (e.g. gender equality manuals, gender mainstreaming manuals, gender impact assessment guides) is listed. There is a section related to the FRAGEN part in the QUING project listing the archives or documentation centres specialized in gender equality policies on national level.
Table of Contents

Acknowledgments.................................................................................................................. 4
Annotated Bibliography........................................................................................................... 8
1. Gender+ Equality Policies.................................................................................................. 8
   1.1 Romanian Sources ........................................................................................................ 8
   1.2 English Sources ........................................................................................................... 13
      1.2.1 Comparative studies .............................................................................................. 16
2. Non-Employment ............................................................................................................... 18
   2.1 Romanian Sources ........................................................................................................ 18
   2.2 English Sources ........................................................................................................... 21
      2.2.1 Comparative studies .............................................................................................. 23
3. Intimate Citizenship ......................................................................................................... 26
   3.1 Romanian Sources ........................................................................................................ 26
   3.2 English Sources ........................................................................................................... 30
      3.2.1 Comparative studies .............................................................................................. 31
4. Gender-Based Violence .................................................................................................... 32
   4.1 Romanian Sources ........................................................................................................ 32
   4.2 English Sources ........................................................................................................... 34
      4.2.1 Comparative studies .............................................................................................. 35
5. OPERA - Gender training books and manuals ................................................................. 37
7. FRAGEN............................................................................................................................ 40
Acknowledgments

I would like to thank my supervisor in this project, Andrea Krizsan, for prompt and thorough comments on drafts of this report, and two colleagues, who have provided me with important information: Ioana Borza, and Cristina Mocanu.

I would also like to thank Ana Maria Rusu, at the National Agency for Equal Opportunities between Women and Men and Mihaela Tănase, at the National Agency for the Protection of the Family, in Bucharest, for detailly answering my questions about their gender training initiatives.
Introduction

The documentation for the present state of the art report lasted two months, from January 15 to March 15, 2007, and involved extensive library and desk research, as well as consultations with gender experts in Romania, and phone and email inquiries to the national equality bodies in Romania. Based on this documentation, several conclusions can be formulated about the current status of the most important research on national gender+ equality policies, and on gender equality aspects of policies related to intimate citizenship, non-employment and gender-based violence.

First, one can conclude that most of the available studies are in the field of sociology, anthropology, policy studies/ political science, and a growing field of gender studies. Gender perspectives or attention to gender as a variable seem to have been very modestly incorporated in the field of economics.

Secondly, although research on gender has been quite significant in Romania, there is currently a gap between collecting and analyzing empirical data, and making the results relevant for policy analysis. The available studies provide an in-depth quantitative and qualitative depiction of gender relations in Romania, and the various dimensions of inequalities that are inscribed in the Romanian gender regime, but the link with the policy field is usually missing. For example, in the field of gender equality, numerous statistical inquires into women’s status and gender differences and hierarchies have been produced by now, such as the Gender Barometer (Open Society Foundation, 2000) or Women and Men in Romania (UNDP, 2005), resulting in a comprehensive picture of gender inequality in Romania. The available data have nevertheless been put to very little analytical use and have so far made a very limited impact on policy analysis and policy making. The widely accepted feminist insight that gender relations are political and change towards gender equality is (also) a matter of politics broadly conceived has not yet made a significant impact on the Romanian research environment.

Thirdly, there is a diversity of knowledge sources in the field of gender+ equality policies. The available sources include not only academic scholarship, but also publications of national and international NGOs, governmental bodies, international organizations, and regional (European) bodies. With the diversity of knowledge sources comes also a ‘hybridization’ of knowledge production, which means that many times the borderlines between academic research, advocacy-oriented research and policy research are blurred.

Furthermore, some conclusions can be drawn for each specific field.

Gender+ equality policies

Much of the gender+ equality policies literature/ analyses have so far evolved around European institutions as central actors. Some analyses of gender equality policies in Romania were centrally concerned with the extent to which policy outputs in Romania fulfilled the EU accession criteria. Other, more critical studies pointed to the absence of grassroots support for EU-driven gender equality policies. Romania’s EU membership, since January 2007, has fundamentally changed the context of policy making, as well as that of research and policy analysis in Romania. The QUING project starts at a turning point for the Romanian research environment, and it will be very interesting to witness how the new context is negotiated and reflected in future studies. At the same time, the QUING project has the opportunity to be part of the new, post-accession wave of scholarship from and about Romania.

Intimate citizenship
Family and the changes in family arrangements are the most frequent topics of studies that are relevant for the field of intimate citizenship. Sexuality and sexual orientation are not frequently considered in the available studies. Many topics are absent from existing research, including the issue of migration and intimate citizenship, and new reproductive choices and technologies. Citizenship as such (not only its gendered or ‘intimate’ aspects) is not a very frequent topic of research in the Romanian research environment.

Non-employment
In the field of non-employment, many studies that analyze unemployment, poverty and social exclusion have been produced in Romania. These studies enhance our understanding of social policies in Romania, anti-poverty strategies, the policies of child protection, the treatment of unemployment, the logic of welfare. However, most of these analyses lack a gender perspective. Therefore, many of them are not included in the present report. The non-employment section of the annotated bibliography below summarizes only those works that specifically employ a gender perspective or at least use gender as a variable. A majority of the gender-sensitive studies explore women’s relationship to the labor market and to the welfare regime (social security). There is almost no research attention to, for example, the economy of care, the gender division of labor or domestic work, or the gendered aspects of work migration. Some attention to intersectionality has emerged in this field, particularly with respect to the intersections of gender and ethnicity, and gender and disability.

Gender-based violence
In the field of gender-based violence, the overwhelming majority of available studies explore the issue of domestic violence. There are almost no analyses that would explore prostitution, sexual harassment, rape or other forms of sexual violence in the case of Romania. Some analyses of trafficking in women from Romania are available as part of comparative studies, or as a product of the interest of international organizations.

Limitations of the state of the art report:
The information presented in the annotated bibliography below reflects not only the availability of studies, but also their accessibility for the author of this report, throughout the documentation period (January – March, 2007). Those publications that were not accessible lack an annotation in the present report.

The particular emphasis of the present state of the art report is on academic scholarship from Romania. However, other sources of publications have been explored, such as specialized gender NGOs (Center Partnership for Equality and AnA, Society for Feminist Analyses), specialized LGBT NGOs (ACCEPT), INGOs (such as OSI), international organizations, such as UNDP, UNICEF and UNIFEM, and regional bodies, such as the European Commission and the Council of Europe.

Grouping of titles
A note is in order on how different titles were placed under different headings. Naturally, some titles belong to more than one heading (gender+equality policies, non-employment etc.) and the decision was simply motivated by what seemed to be the major focus of the book, chapter, article, or report. However, since the issues themselves, intimate citizenship, non-employment and gender-based violence, are overlapping, the reader is kindly advised to read the bibliography as a whole, even when he or she may have a particular research interest in one of the designated fields.
Annotated Bibliography

1. Gender+ Equality Policies

1.1 Romanian Sources

Keywords: gender mainstreaming, equal opportunities between women and men, public management, Romania

The study presents a SWOT analysis of gender mainstreaming in the policies and action plans of public institutions that have specific responsibilities in implementing the policy of equal opportunities between women and men, according to Law no. 202/2002. Using quantitative data from a UNDP project, the analysis finds that the most important variable that correlates with the implementation of gender mainstreaming is the availability of personnel that has received specific gender training/education. The authors further suggest that the responsibilities for gender mainstreaming should be placed at the top management level.

Keywords: equality of opportunities between women and men in Romania, gender discrimination, gender and diversity

This book/publication assesses the shortcomings of promoting equality of opportunities between men and women in Romania, or the “black points” of gender equality in Romania. Several major fields are discussed: gender and diversity, gender and media, gender and politics, the work of anti-discrimination institutions/bodies, and gender and health. Some of the “black points” of gender equality work in Romania that the book reviews are the lack of solidarity between women’s groups (termed soliTarity, rather than soliDarity), the over-institutionalization of gender equality in Romania, the lack of responsiveness of gender equality bodies. However, the overall conclusion is optimistic: there is enough institutional and social ground for gender equality (equality of opportunities) to become everyday reality in Romania.

Keywords: Roma women, reproductive health, intersections of gender, ethnicity and class, social inequalities, Romania
This paper addresses the access of Roma women to reproductive health as a socially, economically and culturally, but also politically determined phenomenon. It investigates this social process in the context of post-socialist Romania as a problem through which one may have an understanding of the broader issue of social exclusion, as it functions under the circumstances of post-socialist transformations. As such, the paper aims to have a contribution to theorizing on how exclusion works at the crossroads of ethnicity, gender and class while (re)producing inequalities, and on how Roma women's multiple discrimination functions to push them into the most underserved social positions in our society. In theoretical terms, the paper also takes part in the debates about the ways in which structural factors, cultural conceptions and agency are working through each other, while shaping women's everyday desires, claims and practices related to reproduction and reproductive health.

Keywords: conservatism, feminism, gender and transition, Romania

The chapter reiterates the thesis that left conservatism is the predominant ideology in Romania, which the author already developed in her book Societatea Retro (The retro society). Left conservatism, the author claims, can only be counteracted by ideologies of emancipation and empowerment, such as feminism. Another major claim of the analysis is that economic and social policies during transition in Romania “channel women to the capitalist areas of the economy, and keep men in state-controlled industries” (p. 267). The author also introduces the concept of ‘room-service feminism’ to describe the adoption of a legal and institutional framework on gender equality under the pressure of EU accession, but without a significant grassroots feminist movement that would support the implementation of these policies.

Keywords: sexuality, gender relations, gender, politics, Romania

This is a comprehensive study on sexuality, gender and gender relations in Romania set against the background of an elaborated theoretical framework. The book is written with the explicit aim of “reaching a wide audience” and therefore it discusses rather rapidly issues such as the participation of women and men in public life, public/private distinctions and gender inequalities in both spheres, or the relevance of gender for governance and democracy.

6. Moraru, Adrian, Raluca Popa, Monica Tobă şi Ovidiu Voicu. 2003. Elaborarea și realizarea politicilor de combatere a discriminării și promovare a egalității de șanse între membrii grupurilor minoritare și cei ai majorității și între femei și bărbați [Policy making in the field of anti-discrimination and equality of opportunities between majority and minority groups and between women and men]. In Intoleranță, discriminare și autoritarism în opinia publică [Intolerance, Discrimination and Authoritarianism in Public Opinion], 79-93. București: IPP.

1 Abstract and paper available at: http://www.policy.hu/vincze/RESEARCH%20PAPER%20WITH%20RECOMMENDATIONS.html

Keywords: anti-discrimination policies, equal opportunities policies, governmental institutions, Romania

This chapter offers an analysis of the main institutions that are involved in the policy making process in the field of anti-discrimination and equal opportunities. The analysis is based on data from a standardized questionnaire that was distributed to governmental institutions and from interviews that were carried out with party representatives. Several shortcomings of the policy making process in the field of anti-discrimination and equal opportunities are highlighted: institutional instability, lack of research to inform policies, lack of coordination in anti-discrimination policies, insufficiency or absence of local level implementation of policies.

Keywords: patriarchy/ patriarchies, gender relations, gender in transition, political power, gender policies, feminism, men and women, Romania

This study aims to reveal the visible and less visible political processes that produce and reproduce patriarchal power relations within gender relations in Romanian transition. The author develops a theory of Romanian patriarchy that views the latter as a political power relation between women and men, which is entangled with personal relations, family relations, the organization of household and domestic work, social institutions, politics and the economy. The author, a sociologist uses extensive quantitative data to show how women are structurally disadvantaged in all these fields. Furthermore, the study claims gender inequalities are ‘last’ among inequalities, because they always intersect with other inequalities, such as racial, ethnic, economic or religious inequalities. Within each disadvantaged group, women are additionally disadvantaged by the sex/gender system. The author suggests patriarchy is also an ever shifting institution that adapts and takes the shape of the society, culture and political system within which it operates. The author draws theoretical inspiration from radical and materialist feminist theories.

Keywords: Roma women, NGOs, Roma policies, Roma women intellectuals, Romania

This paper documents the systematic exclusion of Roma women from the policies to improve the situation of Roma in Romania, from the EU funding mechanisms available to Romania, from Roma projects (governmental and non-governmental), and from research on Roma. Some considerations are presented about the role of Roma women intellectuals, and the difficulties they have to overcome in order to gain a public voice. The article concludes with recommendations for the Romanian government, some other relevant governmental bodies and national institutions, as well as for the European Commission.

Keywords: institutions, equal opportunities policies, national policy machineries for gender equality, Romania

The analysis evaluates the institutionalization of equal opportunities policies in Romania, at the national level, against criteria of efficiency and success for gender equality institutions developed by theories of state feminism. Romanian institutions are found to lack the necessary influence such theories prescribe, because of their being under-staffed, under-budgeted, and lacking enough decision-making power. The analysis draws extensive comparisons with the gender equality institutions of other European countries, and those of the European Union.

Keywords: children’s status, statistics, Romania

The study is a comprehensive statistical monitoring of the children’s status in Romania, up to 1999. The report comprises data on income, consumption, housing, poverty, education, health, demography, social protection and the protection of children at risk.

Keywords: family, family policies, modernization, demography, Romania

This is a study on family policies in Romania. First, the author gives an overview of theories of the family in a socio-historic perspective, based on a binary model of “traditional” and “modern” families. Second, she compiles a historical overview of the “modernization” of the family in Romania, focusing on the demographic processes and socio-economic transformations that enabled the “modernization” of the family. The third part of the book explores “family policies” in Romania during transition (1990-2000), and during state socialism (1950-1990). The author proposes that state socialism blocked the ‘natural’ development of the family towards more modern forms.

Keywords: conservatism, poverty, women, feminized society, inequality, Romania

This volume is a collection of essays on the processes of transformation, or lack thereof in Romanian society, after 1989. The author introduces the concept of “left conservatism”, which she presents as an ideology that is rooted in the state socialist past and is manifested in the Romanian transition as opposition to emancipation and modernization. Chapter four speaks about experiences that are specific to women (birth, breastfeeding, menstruation) and experiences that are mostly shared by women (care, subordination, public invisibility). The author claims that during transition in Romania, other social groups, such as children, elderly, poor men, and poor minorities share the same experiences that are usually ‘reserved’ for women, a process which she describes as the ‘feminization of Romanian society’.

Keywords: social policies, women, women’s participation in the labor force, Romania

The article identifies several trends with respect to women’s participation in the labor force in Romania: high economic activity rates; high motivation to work for pay, but also significant under-employment and discouraged groups; high participation of women in the informal economy; dramatic decrease of availability and accessibility of child support facilities; feminized poverty; very low percentage of part-time workers, because of low wages; high professional polarization between highly qualified women and women with no qualifications; higher unemployment, especially long-term unemployment among women than men. The article also speaks about a crisis in family and child-support policies. The most significant are: the lack of coherent policy support for single-parent families, inadequate support for families faced with extreme poverty, insufficient protection of children against abuse and violence in the family.

Keywords: demography, birthrates, demographic policy, Romania

The article examines demographic trends in Romania, with a focus on birthrates. The article concludes that although birthrates are declining in Romania, it is difficult to conceive of a ‘good’ demographic policy. No measures for stimulating births in Romania are either desirable or sustainable. However, child-support facilities and social protection for families with children are urgently called for in the current demographic context.
The volume is a ‘diagnosis’ of Romanian society and Romanian democracy, at the moment 1996. Chapter V raises a wide range of issues related to gender inequality, women’s political under-representation, the treatment of women as sexual objects, the discrimination of minorities, the poverty of Roma. The analysis was intended to serve as an instrument for policy-making.

1.2 English Sources

Keywords: citizenship, gender regimes, state socialism, post-socialism, feminism, women, emancipation, work, reproduction

This essay discusses the Romanian gender regimes both during state socialism and afterwards, in the post-socialist period. The author focuses on the analysis of citizenship as a contribution to “understanding how social boundaries and cultural differences are built by the state, both among and between male and female citizens” (35). The essay employs a gendered perspective, which the author argues has the potential to “deconstruct the grand narratives of the former official socialist ideology, such as the “new society” and “the new man”; the contemporary political representations of the “reform during transition”; and the dominance of male stories about the “central” experiences of everyday life” (36). The author describes the state socialist gender regime as “paternalist”, while she claims the post-socialist regime is a “re-strengthened patriarchy” (48).

Keywords: Romani women, intersectionality, social inequalities, multiple discrimination, public policies, Romania

Combining fresh survey data and the voices of Romani women reflecting on their status, the report shows that in Romania, Romani women are the ones most likely to suffer from inequalities inside the home, as well as inadequate health care, poor quality of education, and lack of job opportunities. Broadening the agenda provides a realistic portrayal of the challenges Romani women in Romania face through first-hand accounts and solid data compiled by Romani women themselves. Broadening the agenda is intended for the primary use of policy-makers and Romani women advocates trying to promote effective policies that erase gender disparities and combat discrimination, poverty, and social exclusion.

Keywords: acquis communautaire, legislation, equality between women and men, Romania

The publication reviews policies that aim at equal treatment of women and men, from the perspective of harmonization of Romanian national legislation and EU regulations. The authors also draw an extensive comparison between pre-1989 and post-1989 legislation. Both progress and situations in which legal regulations have become less favourable to equal treatment of women and men are highlighted.

Keywords: antidiscrimination mechanisms, national legislation, gender equality bodies, government, Romania

The report describes existing national institutional mechanisms, policies, and programs on gender equality, and highlights several shortcomings. The research identified a general lack of awareness among men and women about how gender inequality affects their daily lives as well as a lack of political will to enforce existing national and EU gender equality policies. The report’s key recommendations include a call for governments to establish regular monitoring of how equal pay principles are practiced in both the public and private sectors and to make these monitoring results public.

Keywords: Romani women, intersectionality, exclusion, feminism, domestic violence, Romania

This paper centers on the exclusion of Romani women from mainstream feminist and antiracist discourses in Europe. This exclusion is explained through the lens of intersectionality of forms of discrimination and social exclusion and problematic identity politics. It discusses Romani women’s invisibility as perpetuated by programs and reports from non-governmental organizations (NGOs). It explains the absence of Romani women from Romani and feminist discourses, the uncritical view of Romani culture, and the vulnerability of Romanian Romani women to domestic violence. It emphasizes that analyses of social problems must be performed from the bottom up, looking at the experiences of those who are multi-burdened, such as poor Romani women. The paper concludes by discussing the value of recognizing privilege as the foundation for inclusive scholarship and discourse.

Keywords: family social protection, history of family social protection, Romania

The paper reviews the main evolutions of the system of family social protection, from a historical perspective. The features of Romanian social protection for family are discussed both for the socialist regime period as well as for the democratic years after 1990, in terms of strategies, legislative framework and effects.

Keywords: minorities, Roma women, EU, Romania

The article speaks of Roma women as a minority within a minority. It briefly describes the situation of Roma women in Central and Eastern Europe, claiming that they are severely restricted in exercising their rights by the prevalence of the traditional, patriarchal family model. Roma women’s issues are not explicitly formulated in the EU documents, and even less in the national strategies for the social inclusion of Roma. The author advocates a special focus on Roma women at both the national and the European level.

Keywords: gender equality at work, feminism, Romania

The objective of the article is to raise some issues the author finds relevant for the topic of equal opportunities for women and men at work. First, the author compares the national legal framework in the field of equality of opportunities in labor relations with European agreements. Second, she sketches a profile of the social groups that could be the target for a social strategy on gender equality. Based on an analysis of quantitative data, the author claims that a strategy for promoting women’s rights in Romania should seek supporters mainly among highly educated women, who live in Transylvania or Bucharest, who are already acquainted with women’s issues and who, additionally, are involved in the debates about women in Romanian society.

Keywords: women’s rights, Romania

This is an edited volume that comprises twenty-eight country reports. The report on Romania is a very useful synopsis of social realities affecting women’s lives (violence against women, participation in the labor market and political participation), as well as a review of the available legal and policy instruments to promote gender equality and address sex-based discrimination in Romania. A lot of information is by now outdated.

Keywords: shadow report, reproductive health, reproductive rights, Romania

This report is intended to supplement, or “shadow,” the report of the government of Romania to the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW). It has been compiled and written by the Center for Reproductive Law and Policy (CRLP) and the Society for Feminist Analysis (AnA), Bucharest, Romania.²

1.2.1 Comparative studies

Keywords: equal opportunities, EU accession, Hungary, Romania

The paper³ explores the impact that the process of European integration has had in the institutionalization of equal opportunities policies in the CEE accession countries. The papers asks to what extent the existence of an asymmetrical relationship between the EU and the candidate countries leads to a mere transposition of the EU discourse on gender equality at the national level. The paper argues that the fact that the accession negotiations and the process of adopting the aquis communautaire is an exclusive matter of state institutions and supranational organizations, while the civil society does not play an active part in the process of policy-making, may lead to a formal adoption of external norms that fail to materialize in concrete actions. The paper comparatively analyzes two cases, Hungary and Romania, in order to highlight similar patterns in the process of the institutionalization of equal opportunities and in the mechanisms of transposition of the EU aquis in this field. The paper thus focuses on the similarities that appear in the two countries during the process of accession negotiations. Finally, the paper also explores the extent to which a poor communication between state actors and civil society could constitute a cause for the ‘formality’ that characterizes the development of equal opportunities in the two countries.

---

² Abstract from the introduction to the report, p.1
³ The annotation is based on the abstract of the paper, provided by the author.

Keywords: reconciliation policies, gender value orientations, comparison of European countries, legitimacy of policies

This chapter is part of a collection of studies on European values that uses data from the 1999/2000 wave of the European Values Study. The chapter by Mălina Voicu focuses on family life and work, and investigates the impact of policies on values associated with work and family. The analysis finds that especially policies for women support will affect not only the degree to which women take part on the labor market, but also orientations towards women’s position in society. Voicu investigates if there is indeed a relationship between policies aiming at facilitating women to enter the labor market and sharing household tasks between partners on the one hand and gender value orientations on the other. She does not consider this relationship in causal terms, but merely in terms of linkages. She observes remarkable differences between European countries not only with regard to gender values orientations, but also in policies. She also finds that similar policies are associated with similar value orientations and that similar social and economic contexts have similar value orientations.

Keywords: family policies, welfare state, women, Hungary, Poland, Romania.

This paper discusses changes and new directions in the gendered nature of welfare state in three post-state socialist societies: Hungary, Poland and Romania. Relying on an analysis of laws and regulations passed after 1989 concerning child care, maternity and parental leave, family support, unemployment and labor market policies, retirement and abortion laws, the authors identify the differences and similarities among the three countries, pointing out not only their status in 2001, but also their trajectory, the dynamics and timing of their change. The authors argue that there are essential differences between the three countries in terms of women’s relationship to the welfare state. They also specify some of the key historical and social variables which might explain variation across countries.

---

4 The annotation is based on the summary available in the introduction of the volume European Values at the Turn of the Millennium, p. 20.
5 Abstract provided by the authors in the introduction to the article.
With the collapse of communism⁶, a new world seemed to open for the peoples of East Central Europe. The possibilities this world presented, and the costs it exacted, have been experienced differently by men and women. Susan Gal and Gail Kligman explore these differences through a probing analysis of the role of gender in reshaping politics and social relations since 1989. The authors raise two crucial questions: How are gender relations and ideas about gender shaping political and economic change in the region? And what forms of gender inequality are emerging as a result? The book provides a rich understanding of gender relations and their significance in social and institutional transformations. Gal and Kligman offer a systematic comparison of East Central European gender relations with those of western welfare states, and with the presocialist, bourgeois past. Throughout this essay, the authors attend to historical comparisons as well as cross regional interactions and contrasts.

2. Non-Employment

2.1 Romanian Sources

Keywords: intersectionality, gender and disability, discrimination, Romania

The study comprises both a research report and a policy paper, and offers an analysis of the intersection of gender and disability in Romania. Data comes primarily from interviews with women with disability and experts on disabilities who work for various governmental agencies, NGOs or associations of persons with disabilities. The main conclusion of the research and interviews is that gender is an ignored dimension in respect of persons with disabilities. The research also specifically asked what the structure of unemployment was with regard to gender for persons with disabilities, and who performed the work of care for persons with disabilities. The research found that gender affects the distribution of work and level of work performed within families that have a member with disability. The research also found a strong connection between disability and the risk of poverty.

The article critically evaluates the National Employment Plans of Romania, since 2002, against the objectives of the Lisbon Strategy. She claims economic inactivity, not unemployment is the real challenge for labor policies in Romania. However, labor policies in Romania have been exclusively focused on the unemployed and have totally neglected the work-age inactive population. No active measures were taken to encourage this segment of the population to seek employment or new, marketable qualifications.

The study inquires into the social and economic aspects of work migration from Romania. The phenomenon of work migration is vastly spread in Romania, where one third of all households have a member who works/ worked abroad. The study is based on a complex empirical research that included a national survey, three microregional surveys, and qualitative studies in six communities in Romania and four Romanian communities abroad. The analysis uses gender as a variable, and all data is disaggregated by gender. Therefore, information is offered on the participation of women in work migration, the kinds of work that Romanian women do abroad, and the groups of women that are more likely to migrate. A special chapter analyzes the impact of migration on family relations and changes in ideas about family, as a result of work migration.

This is a sociological study in Bistrița-Năsăud, Romania that explores women’s motivations for becoming maternal assistants. The author argues the profession of “maternal assistant” may become a valuable career and employment option for women.

This is a sociological study in Bistrița-Năsăud, Romania that explores women’s motivations for becoming maternal assistants. The author argues the profession of “maternal assistant” may become a valuable career and employment option for women.
The report offers a gender-sensitive analysis of women’s relation to the labor market, based on data valid for 2003. The study aimed to formulate general guidelines for drafting gender-sensitive public policies that would be able to increase women’s access to the Romanian labor market. Women’s unemployment and family barriers to women’s work, such as gender norms or domestic responsibilities are explored.

Keywords: domestic work, women’s employment, work/life balance, Romania

The paper is a study of domestic work in Romania, using national, sex disaggregated household statistics. The author finds that, despite many possible qualitative changes, domestic work is still overtly women’s responsibility. The author then links domestic work with women’s employment and analyzes the possible implications for women’s life/work balance. The paper discusses several related issues: the double shift, regulations on maternity and parental leave, the lack of domestic partnership between women and men, and women’s discrimination on the labor market.

Keywords: internal work migration, external work migration, labor force, Romania

The study is a review of internal and external migration in, from and into Romania, 1970-2000. The review presents some sex-disaggregated data concerning both internal and external migration. Both migratory processes are found to have higher female participation: more women than men migrate between rural and urban Romania; likewise, more women that men migrate outside Romania (average ration of women to men, since 1990, is 110-115%). In a brief policy section, migration processes are evaluated against the EU accession criteria. The authors discuss ‘brain drain’ as the most contentious aspect of migration processes from Romania.

Keywords: social policy, exclusion, single mothers, old women, Romania

The article shows the following groups have been neglected by social policies in Romanian transition: children, single parent families (which are mostly single-mother families), poor Roma and poor women. The author claims that poverty in Romania is ethnicized (more Roma are poor than majority groups), and feminized (more women than men face poverty and extreme poverty). The article claims the ‘Western-imported’ rhetoric of women’s rights is not helping the truly disadvantaged women, who would instead need coherent social policies.

Keywords: women and social policy, feminist perspectives on social policy

The article raises the following questions: Is it possible to identify a specific social policy for women, or should we rather look for specific provisions for women within general or special social policies? Is special attention to women as a group needed in social policy, or are their issues adequately treated in a non-differentiated approach to social policy? It is difficult, the author says, to give a definite answer. Instead, the article sketches some guidelines for a feminist perspective in social policies.

2.2 English Sources

Keywords: social security reform, social allowances, pensions, women’s employment, different groups of women, Romania

This gender analysis of social security reform suggests women’s relation to welfare (social security) is strongly connected to their position on the labor market. Hence, it relates women’s access to social security to the negative trends affecting women’s employment in Romania: decline in female employment over the past 16 years, continuing gender pay gap, occupational segregation by gender, both horizontal and vertical, and a rise in poverty among households headed by women. Special attention is paid to the following social groups, and to gender differences within these groups: women at the risk of abandoning their children, the elderly, persons with disabilities, and victims of domestic violence.

Keywords: care for elderly, social services, Romania

At the intersection of international pressure to improve the care sector and the internal pressure from the civil society, new laws have emerged in Romania, which improved the care of dependent people. The Government made amendments to fund home-care services for people who need medical social services in their homes. Until 2005, the author claims, development was slow within the frames of the under-financed Romanian health and social assistance system. The case studies on which the article is based demonstrate the existence of a pool of qualified home-care services in Romania, though limited in coverage, financial resources and size of care-force.

Keywords: social policy, social protection, EU accession, Romania

The article presents the main changes that have occurred in some major fields of social policy in Romania, over the process of EU accession. First, some landmarks of EU social policy and social policy in several Central and Eastern European countries are offered. The analysis then focuses on the pensions system, the aid for the unemployed, the health insurance and social allowances in Romania. The article advances that Romania is ready for EU membership in the field of social protection.

Keywords: women in rural areas, women's economic activities, economic empowerment of women, Romania

This study is focused on the status of rural women in Romania, with particular emphasis on its economic aspects. Quantitative and qualitative methods combine to provide a comprehensive picture of the status of women in rural areas, based specifically on secondary data analysis. The report also includes two case studies showing practical aspects, in two different types of projects dedicated to supporting women’s economic activities. The following results are highlighted: “Many women in rural areas do not have a stable and safe income source such as a wage or a pension. This makes (or could make) them dependent on the breadwinner of the family or on social security services. The level of women’s income is lower than that of men for almost all income categories, because of their lower qualifications and lower occupational status. The women who are unpaid domestic workers or agricultural workers on their own land are very vulnerable to social risks because they are not covered by any insurance scheme. Women from rural areas have fewer resources and fewer opportunities than women from urban areas or men from both urban and rural areas.” (p. 7)

Keywords: poverty, racialization of poverty, feminization of poverty, Romania
This chapter of the study Poverty, ethnicity and gender in Eastern Europe during the market transition explores the main hypotheses of the study about the possible racialization and feminization of poverty, in the case of Romania. The analysis uses data from the comparative survey that was carried out in six countries, Bulgaria, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Russia and Slovakia, between autumn 1999 and spring 2000. The Romanian analysis confirms that poverty is racialized around Roma ethnicity in Romania. The analysis also finds that poverty is feminized in Romania, thus challenging one of the central hypotheses of the study, and the findings from other country studies. Magyari et al. argue that “poverty may be feminized within households if there are systematic asymmetries in access to scarce resources within the family or household unit. Women may be undernourished in patriarchal families or may be poor in nonpoor households.” (p. 27)

2.2.1 Comparative studies

Keywords: European Union, gender inequality, social exclusion, poverty, unemployment, one-parent family, ethnic groups, migrants, violence

Gender mainstreaming is specified as a key requirement in the Social Inclusion Process; however, this approach to policy design and monitoring is still under-developed and often absent from National Plans. The aim of this report is to inform and help develop the gender mainstreaming of the Social Inclusion Process, drawing on national reports for 30 European countries (including Romania). It reviews gender differences and inequalities in the risks of poverty and social exclusion, followed by chapters which focus on selected examples of disadvantaged groups to illustrate the relevance of gender mainstreaming for social inclusion policy.

Keywords: European Union, social security, integration into employment, return to employment

This report is based on the reports prepared by the 30 national experts in the EGGSIE network. In section 1, it reviews some of the recent national reforms or policy debates in relation to the ‘making work pay’ agenda from a gender perspective. This draws on reports for the 15 pre-2004 member states and the 5 non-EU countries included in this network. In section 2, the report reviews maternity and parental leave provisions in relation to the employment integration of mothers and fathers. The impact of parental leave or extended labor market absence for childcare on eligibility for active labor market measures and other training provisions is discussed in section 3. The development of childcare services as a key social infrastructure for supporting parents’ employment is reviewed in section 4. Conclusions are drawn in section 5, which also raises demand-side considerations about job quality and hence employment sustainability for the main care (typically mothers) in low-income households.

---

7 The annotation is based on the summary of the editors.

Keywords: women’s employment, economic activity, economic inactivity, Central and Eastern Europe, the Western Commonwealth of Independent States

This report examines women’s labor market situation in the countries of Central and Eastern Europe (CEE) and the Western Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) in the context of the social and economic transformations in the region in the past 15 years. Using statistical data from the UNECE Gender Statistics Database, the report analyses trends in women’s and men’s labor force participation during the transition to a market-oriented economy in 18 countries in Eastern Europe and assesses their implications for the economic security of both women and men.

By framing the analysis within the social, political and economic context of this transition, the study highlights several questions to which the available statistics cannot by themselves provide answers, including changes in the status and wage levels of public sector vs. private sector jobs, the increase in different forms of informal employment, and the distribution of women and men across them. This "story behind the numbers" illustrates the various ways in which women’s economic security has declined following the collapse of state socialism, and points to the data needed to fully measure the changing labor market position of women and men.

The study concludes with specific recommendations for improving the available data, including those related to the development of the national statistical systems of countries in the region and their harmonization with international and EU frameworks, as well as new data and analysis designed to understand and highlight gender differences. Among these, data on informal work, on the links between employment and family life, on the intersection of gender and other sources of disadvantage, and on migration and trafficking are particularly important.

The study also suggests specific policy measures that need to be taken to improve the disadvantaged position of women in the labor market. Three are highlighted: improving women’s access to decent paid work; allowing women and men to better balance work and family life through the use of various tax-benefit schemes; and adopting transparent job evaluation and wage setting mechanisms that help create standards for equal pay for comparable work.

The increasing labor market participation of women, changing family forms and the demographic pressure from an ageing population have made the reconciliation of work and family one of the major topics on the European social agenda. Yet countries differ in their policy responses, sometimes stressing the need for more flexible working hours, sometimes encouraging the supply of public and private services and sometimes focusing on a more equal distribution of paid and unpaid work. This report contains an overview of policies targeted towards the reconciliation agenda of the 25 EU Member States. In addition, information is provided for three EEA countries, Iceland, Norway and Liechtenstein, and two Candidate countries, Bulgaria and Romania. An innovative element of this study – besides the scope – is that the focus is not only on national, public strategies. If possible, complementary provisions emerging at sector or company level are included as organizations may either supplement or substitute public provisions. In fact, it is at the organizational level where the details of the reconciliation of work and family life are worked out.

Keywords: family support policy, early childhood care and education, transition, Central and Eastern Europe

This synthesis report aims to provide an overview of how demands and needs for family support policy have changed in Central and Eastern Europe since the start of the transition, in terms of both demographic profile and labor market affiliation. It outlines changes in family support systems through a comparison of former and existing policies as the basis for an overview of policy options and directions.
Comparing and contrasting 13 countries spanning different geographical regions and religions (Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldova, Poland, Romania, Russia, Slovakia, Slovenia and Ukraine), the report also touches on family policy models of the European Union (EU), with special emphasis on the ongoing shift towards an integrated approach to early childhood care and education (ECCE).

---

8 This abstract is available in the introduction of the report, p.5.
Keywords: flexible work, impact on households, comparative, labor market regulation, employment regulation, social policy, demographic trends, employment trends

The study compared flexibility and work-life balance in 8 countries (UK, the Netherlands, Sweden, Czech Republic, Hungary, Slovenia, Romania and Bulgaria) using a representative sample survey of those between 18 and 65 carried out in 2001 and a study of policy frameworks.

The study showed that there are many kinds of flexibility to be found in regular, secure jobs as well as in irregular or "atypical" ones. Therefore, we argue that discussion of flexibility should not be limited to labor market deregulation and the number of "atypical jobs" as measured in part-time and temporary work. Taking this broad view, there was a great deal of flexibility inside European labor markets as seen from the employees' perspective. However, we were able to identify "good flexibility" as well as "bad flexibility". Good flexibility is where it was controlled by the person and was associated with high levels of job satisfaction. This was most often found among middle class professionals on higher salaries and was more common in the North Western EU countries than in Eastern and Central Europe. Bad flexibility was associated with lack of control over hours, place and conditions of work, with low job satisfaction and with manual workers on lower incomes and with younger workers. This kind was most often found in Central and Eastern European countries with large numbers in Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary. However, whilst in Western Europe the victims of bad flexibility were mostly women, in ECE countries they were often men.

3. Intimate Citizenship

3.1 Romanian Sources

Keywords: single motherhood, social policies, family policies, Romania

This is a very thorough analysis of single motherhood in Romania. The author examines a wide range of legislation and policies and exposes the bias against single motherhood such policies entail. The author also suggests the concept of “Robin-Hood motherhood” / “Mother (Robin)Hood” to name women’s anti-mainstream option of raising children by themselves.

Keywords: children with disability, psychological aspects, social services, Romania

Families are able to meet the difficulties of raising children with disabilities due to personal/personality resources, their environment or with the help of social services. The paper is looking for protective factors and solutions, which may be helpful for parents in finding successful coping strategies. It also examines risk factors, which usually lead to lack of balance in the family life, and make coping difficult.

Keywords: same-sex marriage, discrimination based on sexual orientation, Romanian marriage law, international and EU jurisprudence

The article aims to offer legal arguments for supporting equal access to marriage rights for people who have same-sex partners. To this end, the article reviews Romanian marriage law, anti-discrimination legislation and international, EU, and national (Romanian) jurisprudence in the matter of the right to marriage for same-sex couples.

Keywords: family, partnership, demography, Cluj

This volume is a collection of sociological studies of reproductive and family/domestic partnership among the adult population of Cluj. The findings come from a survey that was conducted in Cluj, in 2003. The six studies in this collection present various findings and analyses regarding: the main characteristics of households in Cluj and their variation by gender and generation (Cristina Oaneș); the diversity of domestic partnerships and some reasons for falling birthrates (Mihaela Hărăguș); the democratization of family life and the possibilities for the gender redistribution of domestic work (Paul Teodor Hărăguș); health of population/individuals and its impact on the quality of partnership (Szabo Bela); family/work dilemma (Paul Teodor Hărăguș); and finally, attitudes and values attached to the couple, family and raising children (Veres Valer).

Keywords: foster care, longitudinal research, ethnicity, Cluj and Neamț

This article presents the results of a retrospective longitudinal research, between 1999 and 2004, on six cohorts of children from two counties – Cluj (202 subjects) and Neamț (73 subjects), after they ceased to receive foster care. Different foster care placement types and exit models are identified based on the length of stay. The paper outlines also the relationship between the ethnic affiliation of the child and the length of professional foster care placement. In four exit cohorts, Roma children are associated with longer lengths of stay in foster care.

Keywords: homosexuality, LGBT, history of homophobia, religion and homosexuality, HIV/ AIDS, Romania

This publication documents the history of Romanian legislation on homosexual relations, including the criminalization of homosexuality, and also sketches some roots of homophobia in Romanian society. The volume also includes a chapter on religion and homosexuality and one on HIV/ AIDS.

Keywords: foster care, history of foster care, Romania

This study analyzes the policy of foster care in Romania in different historical periods until present. The article underlines the evolution of foster care from informal type of services to formal, legally recognized ones, and from the voluntary and involuntary foster family placements with nonprofessional caregivers to the professional and specialized form of foster care.

Keywords: nuclear families, alternative family arrangements, Romania

This article deals with the major changes that have occurred in the familial and reproductive behavior of the European population and of the actual Romanian society, from the point of view of their impact upon the descending trend of fertility. Family structure and family relationships have become more divers in Romania, after 1990, to include living situations such as cohabitation, divorce, births outside marriage. The article contains a brief presentation of some data regarding divorce and outside marriage births, as well as of the factors that could explain such events, going from the economic ones to the ideational shifts, and to the impact of gender dimension on the changes in family and reproductive patterns. The emphasis is carried on two alternative forms to the nuclear familial model: the mono-parental and the extended families, elected and analyzed for the specific outcomes they produce on the demographic behavior of young adulthood.

Keywords: family policy, demography, Romania

The article reviews trends in marriage behavior and family patterns in Romania, set against data from other European countries. The author finds that families have shifted towards more diversity in living arrangements. Some hypotheses around the effects of various policy actions are also explored.
3.2 English Sources

Keywords: homosexuality, criminalization of homosexuality, discrimination, gay rights, EU accession, Romania

The chapter explores the decriminalization of homosexuality in Romania as part of the process of fulfilling the political criteria for EU accession. The major focus of the paper is on the main actors that contributed to the success of the initiative to repeal Art. 200 of the Romanian Criminal Code that punished homosexuality with imprisonment. The chapter concludes it was “external pressure from the European institutions that created the opportunity to launch the debate on decriminalizing homosexuality in Romania” (p. 221). However, the domestic actors were the ones who directly pushed for change, using the context of European integration. Thus, the author claims, decriminalization of homosexuality in Romania was a matter of awareness of European conditions much more than an endorsement of human rights.

Keywords: homosexuality, ‘Romanianness’, LGBT movement in Romania, gender, sexuality and nation, lesbian women

The paper examines how the categories of gender, sexuality and nation have been reconceptualized by the Romanian LGBT activists so that ‘Romanianness’ becomes inclusive of homosexuality. The paper also explores sexual politics in Romania from a gender perspective by looking at the participation of women within the project of reforming the heteropatriarchal order of the nation.

As the interfaces between gender, sexuality and nationalism represent a relatively new area of scholarly interest, the analysis is informed by theoretical concepts coming from the following directions: feminist theorizing of the nation and nationalism, Foucauldian account on modern sexualities, and theoretical works on sexual politics (queer theories and identity politics).

The research used multiple methods: feminist qualitative methodology, archival research and ethnographic fieldwork. One of the aims of the research was to give voice to the ‘invisible’ lesbian women involved in the Romanian LGBT movement. Their narratives explore their own political invisibility through the lens of heterosexism and patriarchy.

Keywords: queer experience, queer identity, queer subjectivity, discrimination, marginality, the subversive, Eastern/ Western identities, Romania

The study\(^9\) in this chapter investigates Romanian queer experiences. It starts with a presentation of Romanian post-communism as background for the construction of a queer identity. Then, the research locates Eastern European queer identity between what Michel Foucault calls “scientia sexualis” and “ars erotica”, underlining the specificities of Romanian queer subjectivity in comparison with the construction of Western queer identity. The chapter also refers to cases of queer discrimination and reviews the advocacy against the Criminal Code that continued to incriminate same-sex relations until 2001. Finally, the chapter “seeks spaces of marginality, liminality and the subversive, where queer subjectivities emerge as border identities” (p. 124).

Keywords: abuse of homosexuals, abuse by police, discrimination, criminalization of homosexuality, Romania

This is a human rights report about abuses against homosexuals in Romania, mainly by police, before Art. 200 of the Romanian Criminal Code was repealed. The article considered homosexuality a sexual perversion, punishable by imprisonment.

3.2.1 Comparative studies

Keywords: LGBT, access to health care, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Hungary, Macedonia, Moldova and Romania

The report presents the findings on health and access to the health care system by the LGBT communities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Hungary, Macedonia, Moldova and Romania, as well as draws conclusions and makes recommendations to the relevant stakeholders, including international organizations. It also introduces a methodology and lessons learnt which could be used for further research.

\(^9\) The annotation is based on the author’s own summary, on page 124 of the same study.

Keywords: gays’ and lesbians’ rights, homosexual couple, discrimination, sexual orientation, Belgium, France, Slovenia, Poland, Hungary, Romania, the Balkans

The volume is a multidisciplinary collection of studies that document the “impressive evolution” (p.2) in the field of protection against discrimination based on sexual orientation, at the EU level, but also at different national levels. The volume deals extensively with legal situation, anti-discrimination work and same-sex partnerships. The first part brings together contributions related to gays’ and lesbians’ situations in the (then) 15 Member States of the European Union. One issue that the first part discusses at length is the homosexual couple. Frederic Jorgens focuses on the tensions between law and social norms. David Paternotte deals with the process of legal recognition of same-sex couples in Belgium.

The volume also addresses the situation of sexual minorities in the new Member States. Is there a better place for gays and lesbians? Slovenian situation is analyzed by Roman Kuhar. Developments in Polish laws concerning discrimination based on sexual orientation are the topic of Patricja Pogodzinska’s contribution. Judit Takacs gives a historical account of the Hungarian legislation concerning anti-discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. Finally, two last articles explore the situation of gays and lesbians in Romania (Sinziana Carstocea) and the Balkans society (Jean Arnault Derens).

4. Gender-Based Violence

4.1 Romanian Sources

Keywords: media analysis, violence against women, violence against children, violence against elderly, Romania

Using content analysis, the author describes how the media report violence. The author examines two newspapers, Libertatea (Freedom) and Ziarul de Iași (The Iassy Newspaper), over a period of three months, in 2003. The novelty of the analysis rests on the inclusion of violence against children and violence against elder members of the family. Some recommendations for journalists are also included.

Keywords: gender roles, patriarchy, religious customs, domestic violence, Romania

The author claims patriarchal gender roles and religious customs are the most resilient sources of domestic violence in Romania. She further makes the case for the importance of socializing boys and girls into partnership roles and initiating inter-religious dialogue as ways of preventing domestic violence.

Keywords: violence in the family, psychological violence, physical violence, social violence, economic violence, sexual violence, workplace violence, statistics, Romania

This research report presents the findings of a complex quantitative and qualitative research on violence, carried out in 2003. A survey on domestic violence and workplace violence was conducted on two samples: one that was representative for the whole adult population (age 18 and above), and another one that was representative for the population of women age 8 and above. In addition, two institutional questionnaires were carried out: the first one on a sample of county-level institutions with attributions in preventing and responding to domestic violence, and the second one, among a group of 191 experts. The findings of the research and the subsequent analyses which are also part of the report provide a comprehensive picture of the size of the phenomenon in Romania, the main factors that contribute to reproducing domestic and workplace violence, and the experts’ perceptions on main actions needed to stop domestic and workplace violence.

Keywords: gender inequality, domestic violence, qualitative analysis

The authors single out gender inequality in the family and social tolerance towards domestic violence as causes for the resilience of violence against women and children. The research used a feminist methodology and the study presents a qualitative analysis of victims’ perspectives on domestic violence.

Keywords: domestic violence, Romania

The article first examines the ‘reality’ of domestic violence, as portrayed by available statistics, and then the current national and local responses to domestic violence. The article concludes that social attitudes, and particularly the perception of domestic violence as a family issue, are a major barrier to implementing legislation and policy measures to combat DV. Domestic violence, the author claims, should become an issue on the social change agenda, not just on the political agenda.

4.2 English Sources

Keywords: domestic violence, professionals, feminist NGOs, Cluj-Napoca

Based on the results of a questionnaire\(^\text{10}\), the author assesses the conceptions about domestic violence and proper methods of intervention held by psychiatrists, surgeons and orthopedic doctors, as well as by social work students from Cluj-Napoca. The responses to the questionnaire reveal the widespread lack of knowledge about the dynamics of domestic violence among professionals. The patterns of responses suggest that there are specific types of problematic conceptions, such as an individualistic approach of pathologizing the abuser among psychiatrists and an intervention approach aimed at preserving the family, in the case of social work students. Another important conclusion of this research is that the impact of training and formation programs is very limited, as shown by perceptions of most respondents.

Keywords: trafficking in women, migration, family, values and attitudes, violence, Romania

The study is based on both quantitative and qualitative data that were collected in Romania, in 2003. The study presents some of the factors that increase the vulnerability of Romanian women and girls to trafficking: relative poverty (family perceive themselves as poor), desire to seek work abroad, abusive family environment, low attachment to education, lack of information on the dangers of being trafficked. The research also finds that young Roma

\(^{10}\) The annotation is based on the abstract provided by the author, as a preface to the thesis.
women are more exposed to trafficking in human beings than the rest of the population of Romania.

Keywords: women’s sexuality, reproduction, sexuality and the body, abortions, pro-natalist policies, Romania

The chapter is based on the author’s research regarding Romanian women’s beliefs and attitudes about reproduction, sexuality and the body. The author investigates the impact of both communist anti-abortion policies and cultural traditions on women’s experiences of sexuality and partner relations in Romania. The generation of women who were fertile during the 25-years period of anti-abortion regulations in Romania experienced sexuality as ‘a male thing’ (242), and as a constant threat because of the possibility of becoming pregnant. Such traumas still influence women’s perceptions of sexuality, reproduction and the body, in Romania’s transition.

4.2.1 Comparative studies

Keywords: trafficking in women, prostitution, militarization, feminization of poverty, Central and Eastern Europe

“This article analyses aspects of the changing rhetoric and realities since 1989 of the traffic in women from and through Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.” (543) Trafficking in women is linked, the author claims, to the feminization of poverty, demands for prostitution from militarized zones, and the subordinate status of women to men in the societies of the countries that are compared (Romania included). Suggestions are offered for policy makers and legislators to move from “protective reaction” to trafficking in women for prostitution and sexual abuse to “proactive enablement” of women’s rights. (544)

Keywords: trafficking in women, global sex trade, militarization, post-socialism, poverty, gender, Eastern Europe

The authors underscore that trafficking forms part of forced labor migration as well as the global service economy into which women and children from the former socialist states have been incorporated, further diversifying the labor pool” (129). Kligman and Limoncelli argue that trafficking in women is constantly fueled by incentives on ‘the demand-side’, such as the presence of militarized zones in South Eastern Europe, and by the poverty that certain groups of particularly vulnerable women struggle with.
5. OPERA - Gender training books and manuals

Romanian:
This is a general-use guide, which is intended for public information on equal opportunities between women and men. It has been produced by the Ministry of European Integration, in partnership with the Ministry of Labor, Social Solidarity and Family, the National Council for Combating Discrimination, the Center Partnership for Equality, the Center for Curriculum Development and Gender Studies – FILIA, and the National Association of Citizens’ Counseling Offices.
The following fields are covered in the guide:
I. Equality of opportunities
II. Discrimination
III. Labor market
IV. Rights of working parents, protection of mothers, parental leave
V. Harassment, sexual harassment, sex-based discrimination
VI. Responses to discrimination on the labor market

The guide is a practical instrument that provides definitions, some theoretical aspects, methods, activities and exercises for teaching gender partnership. It has been produced by the Center Partnership for Equality, for the use of high school teachers.

This handbook is a comprehensive guide to anti-discrimination work that includes national and European legislation in the field of anti-discrimination, example of jurisprudence, and an overview of responsible institutions and their attributions. The handbook is intended for general use, and it offers several useful practical exercises for teaching anti-discrimination legislation and practice.

The publication is a legislative and institutional guide to equal opportunities between women and men in Romania, compiled for the use of councilers working in the Citizens’ Counseling Offices, a special public information structure that functions within each municipality in Romania. The following fields are included:
a. Equality of opportunities between women and men
b. Equality of treatment on the labor market in: access, training, professional development, wages, firing and sanctions

c. Maternity protection
d. Sexual harassment
e. Violence in the family
f. Trafficking in human beings
g. Education, culture and health

   This is a guide to the prevention of trafficking in women. It contains useful information for personnel that works with girls who are placed in foster care institutions. It has been produced by the Center Partnership for Equality.

   This is a civic education guide, which has been produced for the use of high school teachers. It offers examples of actions to promote and support the gender balanced representation of women and men in education, on the labor market, in decision-making processes and in social life. It has been produced by the Center Partnership for Equality.

   This guide offers a comprehensive picture on gender mainstreaming, the national and European legal frameworks on gender mainstreaming, the methods of implementing the strategy of gender mainstreaming, and various concrete examples of practical implementation of gender mainstreaming. It has been produced by the Center Partnership for Equality.

   This is a legislative guide for the use of civil servants, with a chapter on equality of opportunities between women and men. It has been produced by the Center for Legal Resources.

   This is a guide to the legal framework, methods of prevention and response to domestic violence and practical examples of intervention for the primary use of police.

38

This is the Romanian translation of a Council of Europe publication of gender mainstreaming. The guide offers an introduction to the conceptual framework, the methodology and some best practices of gender mainstreaming. It has been produced by the Council of Europe expert group on gender mainstreaming.

English

This is a comprehensive guide to gender mainstreaming with a special focus on the UN institutional system. The handbook is divided into two main parts. The first one offers a general discussion of gender mainstreaming, while the second part, while the second one provides guidelines for mainstreaming gender in the following specific sectors: macroeconomics and trade; governance and participation; labor; education; health; poverty; justice and human rights; science, research and information and communication technologies; mass media; environment and sustainable development; defense, conflict and peace building. The handbook is designed specifically for policy-makers who are not experts in gender issues, but who nonetheless are charged with the day-to-day responsibility of gender mainstreaming, according to organizational mandates. The handbook is meant to guide these professionals in their work.
6. FRAGEN

Romanian Parliament

The Romanian Parliament maintains an online archive of the entire legislative process from 1996 onwards. The archive can be accessed online, at:
http://www.cdep.ro/pls/proiecte/upl_pck.home (Chamber of Deputies) http://www.cdep.ro/pls/proiecte/upl_pck.home?cam=1 (Senate)

This on-line archive documents the entire legislative process for all legislative proposals that have entered parliamentary debates in either one of the two chambers of the Romanian Parliament, whether successful or not. In particular, it also keeps a full record of all minutes of parliamentary debates and of amendments made to legislative proposals. In respect of certain laws, such as the law against violence in the family, these amendments are many times the result of the lobby of various NGOs, an information which might be specified in the minutes of debates.

National Council for Combating Discrimination
Piata Valter Marăcineanu, 1-3, București
Phone/ fax: +4 021/312 65 78; +4 021/312 65 79; +4 021/312 65 85
Email: contact@cncd.org.ro
Web: http://www.cncd.org.ro/

The National Council for Combating Discrimination has an information center, which was opened in August 2006. The center is located in the building of the Council, at the address: Piata Valter Marăcineanu, 1-3, București.

From the information available at the moment of writing the present report, it was still uncertain whether the center was opened for the general public, or only for internal use. However, it is certain that the center would be open for the general public in the near future.

The center provides access to information about the activities of the National Council for Combating Discrimination, and maintains a library of publications in the field of anti-discrimination.

AnA – Society for Feminist Analyses

There used to be a documentation center at AnA that specialized in feminist publications. Due to lack of funding, the center has recently closed. There are no immediate plans for re-opening the center, and many of the publications have been removed from the Center.

ACCEPT
Str. Lirei, nr. 10, București
Phone./fax: +4 021 252 56 20, +4 021 252 16 37, +4 021 252 90 00
E-mail accept@accept-mail.ro

The leading LGBT association in Romania maintains a library and documentation center, which can be accessed online also:
http://accept-romania.ro/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=33&Itemid=49

Center for Curricular Development and Gender Studies - FILIA/
Centrul de Dezvoltare Curriculară și Studii de Gen – FILIA, SNSPA
The Center has a gender studies library, but it is only open to MA students of the Gender and European Policies program.

Infoeuropa Center
Calea Victoriei 88, Bucharest (hosted by the Central University Library)
Cod postal: 010085
Phone/fax +40 21 315 34 70
E-mail: contact@infoeuropa.ro
This is the EU Information Center in Romania. The Center maintains a library of publications on the EU, community policies and programs, and Romania’s accession process. The Center also offers a reference service that can provide assistance with specific searches on particular topics.

Center for Information and Documentation of the Council of Europe
Str. Al Donici, nr. 6, Sector 2, Bucureşti
Phone:+4 021 2116810 ; Fax: +4 021 2119997
The Center for Information and Documentation of the Council of Europe maintains a large library of publications and CoE documents that can be very relevant for QUING. It also has a reference service that can provide assistance with specific searches on particular topics.